Go to Bat for Respect
Make Everyone Safe from Bullying
You tell bullies it’s NOT OK to pick on people because they are smaller, less strong or less confident. You tell bullies it’s NOT OK to threaten or put down people as a group. You tell bullies — and everyone else — it’s NOT OK to treat people with less respect than you would want to be given. That’s a powerful message to send to others. So as you start the school year, make a pledge to send that message. Send it with me and the Tigers.

“Go to Bat for Respect.”

When you go to bat in baseball, you have to respect the talents of the pitcher. And the pitcher has to respect your talents. This two-way respect makes the competition fair and fun, because it gives each of you an equal chance to succeed.

Off the field, two-way respect is just as important. Showing respect for others — and getting respect in return — helps you build good relationships, understand differences and resolve problems fairly and peacefully.

One big problem today is bullying, and every student should know how respect can stop or prevent it.

That’s why this year’s Tigers anti-bullying program is called “Go to Bat for Respect.” And it is why I am proud to be its spokesperson.

In my time in baseball, I have learned how important respect is on the field — two-way respect with opponents and even my own teammates. Now I want to share ways that same kind of respect can help you off the field to stop or prevent bullying.

This year’s program builds on the lessons and success of anti-bullying programs the team has run for the last three seasons. But it goes further. With advice from Tigers players, it shows how respect is what gives people the power to stand up to bullies and reduce the reasons people might want to bully in the first place.

Respect is a powerful force — more powerful than bullying. Bullying is based on DISrespect. Bullies feel it’s OK to put people down, threaten them or hurt them physically.

Respect shows bullies it’s NOT OK to do this, in person, in groups or on the Internet.

When you “Go to Bat for Respect” you tell bullies it’s NOT OK to make people feel bad because of the way they look, where they live or what their families are like.

Learn with the Newspaper

Respect is a powerful force — more powerful than bullying or other negative behaviors. Respect gives people an equal chance to succeed and to be all they can be. In the newspaper or online, find words and images that show positive things that can happen when people respect each other. Clip or print out the words and images and use them to create a poster titled “It’s All About Respect.”
Students Like You Lead the Way Against Bullying

Bullying can be a problem in any school, and statistics show one out of every three students experiences it at some point. But in Michigan, students like you have taken a stand against bullying by teaming up with the Detroit Tigers and working to make schools safer and more respectful places.

This is the fourth year the Tigers, the Detroit Tigers Foundation, Michigan K.I.D.S., the Detroit Free Press and The Detroit News have worked together to reduce the threats and dangers of bullying.

Nearly 250,000 students across the state have joined in this anti-bullying effort and thousands more will take part when they “Go to Bat for Respect” as part of the program this fall.

The effort, support and commitment of Michigan’s students have drawn national attention — and made the program the best anti-bullying program in Major League Baseball.

Last winter the Tigers were honored with the Major League’s top community service award for their anti-bullying efforts and the support given by the students and schools taking part.

“The Tigers’ efforts to educate young people and teachers about preventing and reducing bullying in schools … are remarkable, and I congratulate their entire organization,” Baseball Commissioner Allan “Bud” Selig said when announcing the award.

With the support of Michigan K.I.D.S. and the Detroit Tigers Foundation, the program has reached students in 90 percent of the counties in the state.

Thousands of students have signed the Tigers Pledge to Stop Bullying and learned how to deal with bullies with the team’s PAWS mascot and the PAWS Plan for Fair Play.

Thousands more took part and signed the Pledge as part of anti-bullying programs at Tigers games this summer and last.

“We are proud to be part of the movement to prevent bullying and humbled to be recognized for our efforts,” said David Dombrowski, the Tigers president, CEO and general manager.

But there is always more that can be done.

According to the anti-bullying group called the National School Climate Center:

- In many school communities, more than 50 percent of students do not feel safe in school.
- More and more research shows that mean, cruel and/or bullying behaviors negatively affect everyone — victims, witnesses and bullies themselves.
- The entire school community is affected by the negative behavior of even a minority of students acting like bullies.

Why Do People Bully?

People bully others for many reasons. Some people bully because they want to impress a peer group or a group they want to get “in” with.

Some bully because they are having problems or feel bad about themselves, and think bullying others will make them feel better or stronger.

Some bully because they see other people behave like bullies — brothers, sisters, parents or other kids in the neighborhood.

Some bully because they feel if they don’t bully someone, someone else will bully them.

Both Boys and Girls

Both boys and girls can be bullies and both boys and girls can be the targets of bullies.

Boys are more likely to use physical violence — or the threat of violence — to bully.

Girls are more likely to use words, gossip, putdowns and stares to bully or intimidate others.

At the same time, some girls are violent bullies and some boys use words or putdowns to bully.

And both boys and girls use the Internet, text messages, e-mail, Twitter and social sites like Facebook for electronic bullying — called “cyberbullying.”

If you see bullying, or are the victim of bullying, a new statewide anti-bullying hotline has been set up to report it — and you don’t have to give your name. (For details, see Page 7.)
Third baseman Nick Castellanos is 6’4” and 210 pounds and has always been a great athlete. So you wouldn’t think he would have much experience with bullying.

Yet he still remembers times when he was growing up when he had to “stand up for other kids” who were being bullied.

“A perfect example is my little brother, who always hung out with me and my friends,” he recalls. “I am two years older than he is and a lot times he was the butt end of jokes.

“I would try to protect him and let the bullies know it was not all right,” Castellanos adds. “Once I stood up for him and let the bullies know I had his back, it made the whole situation a lot better.”

Putting an end to bullying starts with respect, Castellanos says — respect for others, respect for differences, respect for people’s abilities.

“I think it’s important for kids to respect each other and learn to respect everyone,” says the 22-year-old Castellanos, who’s in his first full season with the Tigers. “I believe most bullying is when kids pick out differences. When kids learn to appreciate each other for who they are, it just creates a better school environment.”

It’s especially important to respect yourself, Castellanos says, so that you’ll have the self-confidence to stand up to bullies, or step in when you see others being bullied. When everyone has self-respect, it creates a positive environment in which bullying has no place.

“If you don’t respect yourself, how can you respect others?” he asks. “When you learn how to respect yourself and appreciate yourself for who you truly are, it’s easier to give that feeling toward others.

“When you give off that sort of confidence and respect, it gives others the opportunity to reach out to you and do the same.” Castellanos earned plenty of respect when he was growing up in Florida.

In high school he led two different schools to state championships — once as a sophomore and once as a senior after transferring. In his senior year he batted an eye-popping .542 and was named Gatorade Player of the Year for the entire state. In 2009, he earned a spot on the U.S. team for the Pan American Junior Championships for players under 18 and batted .356 to lead the team to a gold medal.

After considering a baseball scholarship to the powerhouse University of Miami program, he was drafted by the Tigers with the 44th pick in the 2010 Major League Baseball Draft.

Though he had played shortstop in high school, the Tigers shifted him to third base, and this year he became the team’s starter at the position.

As a rookie, he has found respect to be as important on the field, as it is off the field.

“Without respect it’s hard to accomplish anything as a rookie in baseball,” he says. “Respect is huge. When you show it to your teammates and your opponents, you are a lot more well received. When you are surrounded by peers who respect you and like you, it’s a lot easier to have success.”

Learn with the Newspaper

Showing respect, and expecting respect in return, is the first step toward putting an end to bullying. As third baseman Nick Castellanos says, “It’s important for kids to respect each other,” because that makes it possible for everyone to succeed. In the newspaper or online, find a story in which respect helps people become successful. Write a paragraph, detailing how respect was shown and how it made success possible.
The PAWS Plan for Fair Play

Make Everyone Safe from Bullying

The Tigers mascot PAWS is always looking for ways to make communities better.

So this fall he is joining Tigers players to get students to “Go to Bat for Respect” as a way to stop bullying.

The goal is to “Make Everyone Safe from Bullying,” and to do that PAWS is offering “The PAWS Plan for Fair Play.”

The PAWS Plan contains advice from bullying experts that can help you if you are bullied and show you what to do if you see someone else being bullied. And remember that each piece of advice will be even more effective if you have respect for others, and respect for yourself. So “Go to Bat for Respect” with the PAWS Plan for Fair Play.

If You Are Bullied …

1. Speak Up. Nobody likes to be picked on, but ignoring the situation will make it worse. Calmly tell the bully “Stop it.”
2. Never Fight Back, but firmly tell the bully “leave me alone” and walk away with confidence.
3. Tell an Adult You Trust. Many kids feel embarrassed they have been bullied, but you need to tell an adult who can offer ways to help you.
5. Remember It’s Not Your Fault. Nobody deserves to be bullied. Talk to a friend or trusted adult about how you feel.

If Someone Else Is Bullied …

1. Speak Up. If you feel safe in the situation, tell the bully “Stop it.”
2. Tell an Adult. Kids who are being bullied are sometimes scared to tell an adult. But a bystander can tell an adult — and should. At school, tell a teacher, an aide, a coach, a custodian, a guard or the principal.
3. Be a Friend. Even if you don’t know the person being bullied, go over to them. Let them know how you think they are feeling. Walk with them.
4. Stop Untrue Messages. If someone spreads rumors or messages you know are untrue, tell the person you know this is wrong, and tell others as well.
5. Get Friends Involved. Get your friends to help a person who is being bullied.
6. Refuse to Be a Bystander. If you see friends laughing along with a bully, let them know that by laughing they also are being bullies to the victim.

Defeat the Label Program Takes Anti-Bullying Message Nationwide

Defeat the Label, a nonprofit organization dedicated to putting an end to bullying, was founded in Metro Detroit, but in just three years it has grown to have impact across the nation and around the world.

Based in Bloomfield Hills, Defeat the Label is working to promote “a bully free society without social labels and stereotypes” by “putting the power for change where it belongs — in students’ hands.”

“We’ve all been called names,” the group declares on its website www.defeatthelabel.com. “Many of us have been bullied. Enough is enough! ... Together we can put an end to bullying.”

Supported by entertainers like Joe Jonas, Lucy Hale and After Romeo and by athletes like the Detroit Red Wings, Defeat the Label offers multiple local in-school programs, such as the Defeat the Label in Your School Tour and Upstander Program. The Upstander Program is an education curriculum that inspires kids to devise new ways for spreading the message of tolerance and inclusion throughout their schools and communities.

Defeat the Label is partnering with the Detroit Tigers in the team’s anti-bullying “Go to Bat for Respect” program and is raising money to bring its programs to more school communities.

For the last three years Defeat the Label has also organized millions of students to join together and speak out against bullying in a Stand 4 Change Day program the first weekend of May. More than one million students from every U.S. state and 40 nations around the world joined the program the first year, and it has grown every year since then. Participants take the Defeat the Label Pledge, which declares: “I will not allow social labels to define others or myself. I will take a stand against bullying in my school. Starting today, I will stand up and Defeat the Label.”
Second baseman Ian Kinsler is a big believer in cause and effect. If he gets a good swing on a ball, for example, he knows there’s a good chance he could hit it out of the park for a home run. Or if he gets on base, there’s a good chance he could steal a base to get in a better position to score.

Kinsler also believes in cause and effect when it comes to finding a way to prevent or stop bullying.

“If all children can respect each other,” Kinsler says, “bullying will cease. Respect among children is the most important thing.”

Kinsler, who has earned lots of respect as an American League All-Star, is in his first season with the Tigers, having come over from the Texas Rangers last winter in a trade for first baseman Prince Fielder.

He was named an All-Star for the fourth time this summer after a strong performance in the first half of the season.

He’s a multi-talented player, with both power and speed. In fact, he is one of just 12 Major Leaguers to have both 30 home runs and 30 stolen bases in one season more than once.

His achievements and success have given him the self-confidence players need to succeed at the highest level.

They also have given him self-respect — something every person needs, he says, and something that is essential to putting an end to bullying.

“It’s very important to have self-respect and self-confidence,” says the 32-year-old Kinsler. “If you respect yourself, you will be able to respect others. And if you respect yourself, you’ll be able to rely on yourself and think positively if people say negative things about you.”

That is important to remember, because bullies not only threaten people physically, but often use words to put down or make fun of people in person or on the Internet.

When faced with such situations, Kinsler says, you need to have self-respect and self-confidence. And you need to see how others have been empowered by respect.

Kinsler saw that first hand with a teammate he had with the Texas Rangers, for whom he played for eight years before being traded to the Tigers.

“I had a teammate, Michael Young, who respects the game, his teammates and fans,” Kinsler says. “He was my teammate and now he’s my opponent, but I learned a lot about respect from him.”

Young always treats other people with respect, Kinsler says, but respect means more than that to him. It means showing respect for everything in your life, from your career to your friends to your family.

“I learned so much from him in terms of how to prepare myself for the game, how to work hard, how to deal with my family after losing a game,” Kinsler says. “Michael was all about respect.”

That’s especially important when working to make schools safe from bullying. Recognizing people’s skills and respecting their differences creates a climate of respect in which bullying has no place.

“Every kid has different abilities and different strengths, whether it’s math, science or physical education,” Kinsler says. “The best way to lead is to lead by example. Always do your work, always be on time, follow instructions and directions from your teacher and respect your peers.”
Statewide Anti-Bullying & Student Safety Hotline Now Available for Students to Call

When students are bullied — or see bullying taking place — a big question has always been “Who do you tell?”

It’s always good to tell a trusted adult, but many students do not do that because they fear the bullies will find out and “get back” at them.

This fall, for the first time, students anywhere in Michigan can report bullying by calling a statewide hotline — and they don’t have to give their name.

The hotline is called OK2SAY, and that’s what state leaders want students to know — it’s “OK2SAY” something about bullying to put an end to it.

The hotline, which has been in the works for two years, gives students a variety of ways to report bullying, cyberbullying with the Internet and other threats of violence.

You may call in information by phone (1-855-5OK-2SAY), by text (652-729) or by email ok2say@mi.gov. You also may download an app for smart phones from the Apple Store or Android.

Inspired by a program begun in Colorado after the deadly shooting at Columbine High School, the Michigan hotline is designed to stop or prevent all levels of violence, according to the Michigan Attorney General’s Office, which is running the hotline with the Michigan State Police.

“We expect the Number One types of calls will be for bullying and cyberbullying,” says Sue Sanford, the OK2SAY program director for the Attorney General’s Office. “If kids can report it without being labeled a snitch, that will be the linchpin of the program. If kids have a way to report safety issues this way, they will report it.”

The hotline is staffed by Michigan State Police Troopers, who work with local police and school officials all over the state.

If a tip involves “a potential crime” or attack, Sanford says, it will go to local police or the State Police, as well as the school involved (students are still encouraged to call 911 if there is an immediate emergency).

If a tip involves bullying, cyberbullying or a student being depressed or distraught, it will go to the local school so that an adult can step in. “I really think bullying is the area we can make an impact,” Sanford says. “If word gets out to the schools that somebody is being bullied, steps can be taken to make things better.

“Kids often are afraid to say anything,” she adds. “At the least, a school counselor can reach out to a kid who is being bullied, and school officials can take steps to stop the bully.”

The hotline gives students a way to report bullying behavior no matter where they go to school.

“It’s kind of scary, but there have been kids who changed schools and the bullying followed them, particularly cyberbullying,” Sanford says.

To address such issues, the OK2SAY program is sending representatives into schools to speak directly to students about bullying, cyberbullying and the importance of using the hotline to stop problems.

Schools wishing to schedule a presentation, can go to the OK2SAY website and click on the tab for school presentations to get information. The website is www.mi.gov/OK2SAY.

To report bullying:
call 1-855-5OK-2SAY
text 652-729
e-mail ok2say@mi.gov
Listen to Rajai Davis Outfielder

In his nine years in the Major Leagues, Tigers outfielder Rajai Davis has been one of the best base stealers in baseball.

In nine seasons he has stolen more than 20 bases and in four of those he stole more than 40. In his best year, in 2010, he stole an even 50.

For a base stealer like Davis, the first step is the most important. It’s how a runner gets a “jump” on the pitcher and a head start to the next base.

The first step you take when you encounter bullying also may be the most important, Davis says.

“The first step is recognizing it right away, and if you don’t like something take a stand right there and don’t allow it to happen,” Davis says. “I can remember a time when I was being bullied growing up, and the problem is if you don’t stop it right away, then it will continue.”

The key to stopping bullying is respect, Davis says — respect for yourself and your right not to be bullied.

“You have to take care of yourself, and a part of taking care of yourself is respecting yourself,” says Davis, who grew up in Norwich and New London, Connecticut.

“You’re going to grow up one day and respecting yourself is going to be something you want to do. It’s a choice we have to make.”

This is the first season with the Tigers for the 33-year-old Davis. He joined the team as a free agent in the off season, after three years with the Toronto Blue Jays. Before that he had played three years with the Oakland Athletics and parts of two seasons with both the San Francisco Giants and the Pittsburgh Pirates.

In his Major League career, Davis has learned a lot about the importance of respect — respect for opponents, respect for their skills, respect for what others can teach you.

“At this level, you have to respect all your opponents,” he says. “Each person at this level has ability that has separated them from others. That’s what allowed them to make it to the big leagues.”

You also can improve your own game by “learning and listening to people who have achieved success.”

Inside and outside sports, respect helps people build good relationships and prevent or stop problems like bullying, Davis says.

“You earn respect by showing respect, and by giving respect you earn respect,” he says. “If you want respect, you must respect others first and respect shall be given unto you.”

Davis earned respect early as a top athlete. He played for a championship Little League team when he was 10, and in high school he earned letters in baseball, basketball and football. He attended college at a branch of the University of Connecticut and was drafted by the Pirates as a second baseman in the 2001 Major League Draft.

Self-respect and self-confidence helped him overcome the challenges he faced, including that long-ago bullying experience.

Now he wants to help kids develop self-respect and self-confidence to overcome their own challenges.

“Some people are raised in difficult situations and have to make difficult adult decisions at a young age,” he says. “But a lot of people have been successful who came out of a rough childhood.

“A difficult situation is no excuse,” he adds. “You have to think positive and surround yourself with positive people. You have to continue to work hard for your dreams to be successful. You have to give respect to earn respect.”

In other words, you have to “Go to Bat for Respect” whenever you can.
Thousands Stand Tall to Strike Out Bullying at Comerica Park

Students, schools and families in communities all over Michigan have been working to put an end to bullying.

But if you wanted to feel how unified people are in the effort, you couldn’t top the moment in the Tigers’ special “Strike Out Bullying” program before their game with the Seattle Mariners on Sunday, August 17.

Fifty students and parents from across the state led a parade around the field carrying the “Strike Out Bullying” banner they had signed.

They marched the banner to home plate, where seven students stood tall, each reading a line from the Tigers Pledge to Stop Bullying.

Then, as if they were one person, more than 40,000 students, parents and fans rose to their feet to show support for the anti-bullying message (see Page 12).

“Seeing that just gave you goosebumps,” said Ellen Hill Zeringue, the Tigers Vice President of Marketing. “To see a sold out crowd standing as one to put an end to bullying was so inspiring. It really showed that people in every community want our schools and neighborhoods to be bully-free.”

This year’s “Strike Out Bullying” program was the second such event the team has presented at Comerica Park, and it put a spotlight on how united students are about putting a stop to bullying.

At the event students from all over the state got an opportunity to show support for the Tigers anti-bullying effort by signing the sidewalk where the Tigers Pledge was displayed outside the ballpark.

A student representing the Defeat the Label anti-bullying program threw out the first pitch, and more than 8,000 students under age 14 received Strike Out Cyberbullying wristbands from the Michigan State Police.

Students also got to pose for pictures with Tigers mascot PAWS and the Yak from the Detroit Newspaper in Education to spread the anti-bullying message, and a DJ and the Promotions Team from 98.7 AMP Radio was also present.

Defeat the Label, 98.7 AMP Radio, the Michigan State Police and Subway restaurants are all sponsors and supporters of this year’s “Strike Out Bullying” program.

Michigan State Police Work Year Round to Stop Bullying

Eliminating bullying in schools and neighborhoods is an important goal for the Michigan State Police.

It’s so important, they go into elementary, middle and high schools throughout the year to offer information and advice to help students prevent bullying.

The anti-bullying effort is part of the State Police T.E.A.M. program — which stands for Teaching, Educating And Mentoring. The program seeks to make communities and schools safer by teaching about social rules and responsibilities, positive behaviors and what to do when experiencing or witnessing bullying.

Community Service Troopers (CSTs) go into schools all over the state, and in 2013 they reached more than 94,000 elementary, middle and high school students, according to Sgt. Duane Zook of the Prevention Services Unit of the State Police.

For elementary students, the program stresses “Being a Good Friend and Classmate” for Grades K-2 and “Don’t Be a Bully, Be a Friend” for Grades 3-5. Both are designed to teach the basics of what bullying is (and is not), how to recognize bullying and ways to stop bullying.

The middle school program stresses that “Bystanders Are the Solution” and teaches how to recognize hostile environments, the motivations of bullies, the impact on victims and how bystanders can intervene to address situations.

The “Bullying Awareness for High School” program extends the lessons of the middle school effort, especially the impact on victims and ways to correct hostile environments.

Both the middle and high school programs address the problem of cyber-bullying through the Internet and social media and offer advice on how to stop it.

Schools wishing to schedule a visit from a Community Service Trooper for an anti-bullying program can get information online at www.Michigan.gov/mspcst by clicking on the “Find a CST” link in the CST Breakout Box. A map of Michigan counties will appear and contact information pops up when you click on a county.
Phil Coke has been a top athlete all his life and a Major League pitcher for seven years.

But he knows first hand what bullying can do to people.

“I know that it’s hard to believe, but I’ve been bullied myself, ” he says. “If I had had more skills to help myself, I would have been able to stop what was occurring sooner.

“If I had not been afraid to say something to a teacher or even the principal — if I hadn’t been scared to do that — I wouldn’t have gone through so many different levels of bullying. It’s important for kids to learn skills to help them stop bullying.”

One of the most important things, in Coke’s view, is to learn the importance of respect.

“It all starts with respect,” he says. “Respect for other kids, respect for their right not to be hassled, respect for their right to go to school, play sports or pursue other interests without threats or intimidation.

“Every kid can be a leader when it comes to stopping bullies,” he adds. “Every kid can give support to someone who is being bullied, let bullies know it’s not cool to bully and let adults know when bullying is happening.”

Coke is in his fifth season with the Tigers, and he has been involved in the team’s anti-bullying efforts right from the start.

He was the spokesman for the program in its first year and as a result was called to testify at a hearing for U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder’s National Task Force on Children Exposed to Violence — a nationwide effort to reduce childhood violence.

“Bullying holds kids back, whether it involves physical threats, verbal threats or put-downs over the Internet,” Coke says. “I know. I’ve been there. And I know every kid can step up to be a leader to stop bullying.”

When bullying occurs, he says, “Somebody’s got to do something. If you’re a witness to bullying of any sort, or a victim of bullying of any sort, you need to find an adult and let them know about the situation. Because if you don’t and you let it go, it’s going to continue.”

Coke knows that is hard for some kids, who fear that they’ll be seen as “selling out” or “being a snitch” if they report bullying.

That’s “backwards” thinking, says Coke, who is 32 years old. “I think it is incredibly important and intelligent to be willing to stop bullying, and not be the one that is doing the bullying. Why is it okay to put the person that’s doing the bullying on a pedestal because you’re scared that if you don’t he’s going to come after you or she’s going to come after you? I’m sorry, but I think we’ve got it backwards.”

Growing up in Sonora, California, Coke says he was a kid who was willing to stand up to bullying when he saw it happening. But he cautions today’s students not to put themselves in “a bad position” that could grow violent.

“It’s better to find an adult — a teacher, a counselor, a playground aide — just to get eyes on the situation.”

“There’s always somebody that you can find,” he says. “Get in touch with an adult and let them know about the situation.”

Phil Coke has been a top athlete all his life and a Major League pitcher for seven years.

But he knows first hand what bullying can do to people.

“I know that it’s hard to believe, but I’ve been bullied myself, ” he says. “If I had had more skills to help myself, I would have been able to stop what was occurring sooner.

“If I had not been afraid to say something to a teacher or even the principal — if I hadn’t been scared to do that — I wouldn’t have gone through so many different levels of bullying. It’s important for kids to learn skills to help them stop bullying.”

One of the most important things, in Coke’s view, is to learn the importance of respect.

“It all starts with respect,” he says. “Respect for other kids, respect for their right not to be hassled, respect for their right to go to school, play sports or pursue other interests without threats or intimidation.

“Every kid can be a leader when it comes to stopping bullies,” he adds. “Every kid can give support to someone who is being bullied, let bullies know it’s not cool to bully and let adults know when bullying is happening.”

Coke is in his fifth season with the Tigers, and he has been involved in the team’s anti-bullying efforts right from the start.

He was the spokesman for the program in its first year and as a result was called to testify at a hearing for U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder’s National Task Force on Children Exposed to Violence — a nationwide effort to reduce childhood violence.

“Bullying holds kids back, whether it involves physical threats, verbal threats or put-downs over the Internet,” Coke says. “I know. I’ve been there. And I know every kid can step up to be a leader to stop bullying.”

When bullying occurs, he says, “Somebody’s got to do something. If you’re a witness to bullying of any sort, or a victim of bullying of any sort, you need to find an adult and let them know about the situation. Because if you don’t and you let it go, it’s going to continue.”

Coke knows that is hard for some kids, who fear that they’ll be seen as “selling out” or “being a snitch” if they report bullying.

That’s “backwards” thinking, says Coke, who is 32 years old. “I think it is incredibly important and intelligent to be willing to stop bullying, and not be the one that is doing the bullying. Why is it okay to put the person that’s doing the bullying on a pedestal because you’re scared that if you don’t he’s going to come after you or she’s going to come after you? I’m sorry, but I think we’ve got it backwards.”

Growing up in Sonora, California, Coke says he was a kid who was willing to stand up to bullying when he saw it happening. But he cautions today’s students not to put themselves in “a bad position” that could grow violent.

“It’s better to find an adult — a teacher, a counselor, a playground aide — just to get eyes on the situation.”

“There’s always somebody that you can find,” he says. “Get in touch with an adult and let them know about the situation.”
Go to Bat for Respect: End Bullying

You don’t have to play Major League Baseball to make a big impact in someone’s life. If you or someone you know is being picked on, stand up and speak out against bullies.

SUBWAY® restaurants have teamed up with your Detroit Tigers to go to bat for kids. Help put an end to bullying at your school by participating in the Go to Bat for Respect contest.

To enter, create a poster or video that describes an occasion when you’ve stood up for yourself, something you believed in, or someone that needed your help—even if it wasn’t popular. One grand prize winner will win a $500 SUBWAY® cash card and a $1,000 grant for their school. All runners-up will receive a $50 SUBWAY® cash card.

We need your help to end bullying. Join SUBWAY® restaurants and the Detroit Tigers in Going to Bat for Respect. Visit www.go2bat4respect.com for contest rules and details.

©2014 Doctor’s Associates Inc. SUBWAY® is a registered trademark of Doctor’s Associates Inc.
Take the Tigers Pledge To Stop Bullying

To stop bullying in my school, I will
• Peacefully stand up for kids who are being bullied.
• Tell an adult when I see bullying happen.
• Tell a trusted adult if I am bullied.
• Never fight back but calmly walk away from bullies.
• Never bully others if I am bullied.
• Stop rumors and bullying on the Internet
• Let classmates know bullying is not cool.

Signed,

At the Tigers’ “Strike Out Bullying” program at Comerica Park, students signed the sidewalk near the Tigers Pledge.

Michigan K.I.D.S. Says THANK YOU Detroit Tigers
Detroit Tigers Foundation, an affiliate of Ilitch Charities and these additional sponsors

For Supporting This Newspapers In Education Program.